Excerpt: .sounds his encouragement to the setting female--the resonant eonquor--eee --which we may also hear floating up from the border of the swamp as the dusk of evening settles down. In late summer and autumn the birds gather in flocks repairing to roosts every night, often associating with Grackles, Eobins and Cowbirds, and later the two sexes flock separately, remaining apart until the mating season in April. The Eed-wings are among the first migrants of spring time, and the flocks of females always arrive somewhat later than the males. In winter occasional flocks are to be found in Cape May county and along the shores of the Delaware at least as far north as Philadelphia, but they drift up and down and are probably not permanently resident at any one spot. The Eed-wing is one of the few of our smaller birds against which the...
