Excerpt from Water Supply, City of San Francisco: Application for Lake Eleanor and Hetch Hetchy Valley Reservoir Sites, Act of February 15, 1901 This is the so-called revocable permit act, under which rights of way for electrical plants, transmission lines, canals, ditches, and reservoirs are permitted through the public lands and forest reservations of the United States. The only national parks to which it applies are the Yosemite, Sequoia, and General Grant National Parks, in the State of California. The act was passed on February 15, 1901. On October 15, 1901, the city of San Francisco, through the Hon. James D. Phelan, then mayor, filed an application for reservoir rights of way at Lake Eleanor and Hetch Hetchy. After consideration of this application, Hon. E. A. Hitchcock, then Secretary of the Interior, on December 22, 1903, refused the permit on the principal ground that he did not have the necessary statutory authority. He discussed the existing and available water supplies of the city of San Francisco, and upon the information then before him, held that there were other adequate sources of supply available; but the controlling consideration for his refusal of the permit was the construction placed by him upon the two acts of Congress above mentioned. The city continued its efforts to Obtain the permit, but on February 5, 1905, Secretary Hitchcock again reached the conclusion that the permit could not be granted without further legislation by Congress. The application was again renewed by the city before Secretary Hitchcock's successor, Hon. James R. Garfield, and on May 11, 1908, Secretary Garfield granted the permit which is now in force. This permit provided that the city...
